Drinking, cannabis use up: Study

But survey found significant decline in binge drinking among young adults

A daily beer or cocktail could be turning into a habit for more people in Ontario and marijuana use is also growing, according to a new survey.

The survey released yesterday by the Centre for Addiction and Mental Health suggests the proportion of adults reporting daily drinking increased to more than nine per cent in 2009 from 5.3 per cent in 2002. Tobacco smoking is down slightly, but the use of cannabis, or marijuana, has increased to 13.3 per cent in 2009 from 8.7 per cent in 1996.

About one in seven of those surveyed — almost 15 per cent — reported symptoms of "elevated psychological distress" while almost six per cent reported poor mental health.

The study noted some differences but no strong pattern in regional differences. Those surveyed from northern Ontario were the most likely to be smokers and to smoke daily.

Those from Toronto were the least likely to drink alcohol.

The southwestern part of the province reported the highest average number of drinks consumed per week. Driving after drinking was most likely in the southwest and central-south regions.

THE CANADIAN PRESS

"The data tell us that while the number of people who drink alcohol has not changed, the way they are drinking has — people are drinking more often and may be consuming more alcohol when they do drink, although there may be fewer binge occasions."

Prostitution ruling appealed

Government launches bid to overturn earlier decision that struck down restrictions on sex trade

MARIANA IONOVA
TORONTO@METRONEWS.CA

Canadian laws prohibiting sex workers from hiring security and operating brothels do not put them at greater risk, argued the Crown's attorney yesterday as the government began an effort to overturn last fall's Ontario Superior Court decision to strike down restrictions on prostitution.

Last September, Justice Susan Himel ruled that prohibiting sex workers from communicating with customers on the street, living off the avails of prostitution and running common bawdy houses puts them at risk of violence and abuse.

Federal Justice Department attorney Michael Miller rejected the idea that removing legal restrictions would make prostitution safer, arguing that sex work is inherently risky and the existing laws do not make it more dangerous.

"The purpose of these provisions is to discourage people from engaging in these activities," he told the Ontario Court of Appeal, arguing that such laws help the government indirectly control prostitution and ensure public safety.

Justice David Doherty, one of the five presiding judges, also challenged Miller's statement, saying that hiring a bodyguard for safety is a right that is infringed upon by the law.

But Miller argued that engaging in sex work is a choice and the government has no obligation to facilitate it.

"Prostitution is an economic activity and not a constitutionally protected right — or a right at all," he said.

The appeal hearing continues this week.

Workers speak

Outside the courthouse, Terri-Jean Bedford, one of the three sex workers who challenged the legal restrictions, vocally disagreed with the claim that there is no way to make prostitution safe.

▶ "It's not true," she said to reporters. "The government is just trying to perpetuate the stigmatization (of sex workers)."

▶ Bedford and two other women, who are the driving forces in the case, say legislation forces sex workers to conduct hasty and furtive conversations on the street with prospective customers, allowing them little time to assess whether "dates" could be a problem.

Slaying prompts $50K reward

HANDOUT

▶ Morris Conte

A $50,000 reward is being offered for information that helps solve the killing and dismemberment of a Bolton man, whose remains were found scattered in central Ontario.

Morris Conte, 45, was last seen May 21, 2010, in Caledon.

Some of the man's remains were found the next morning in the Sugarbush area of Oro-Medonte Township, north of Barrie, provincial police said yesterday.

Later that afternoon, more than 100 kilometres from the first site, a person walking on Maplehurst Road in Lake of Bays Township, east of Huntsville, discovered more human remains.

On May 28, 2010, an employee working for a paving company found remains on the shoulder of Stoneleigh Road, south of Muskoka Road 117.

Those remains were also found to belong to the same person as the remains found six days earlier, investigators said.

News in brief

Needle found in lettuce

WARNING. Toronto police have issued a warning after a man reported finding a needle in a package of lettuce hearts.

Police say the man found a five-centimetre sewing needle pierced into the spine of the lettuce purchased last Thursday.

It was a package containing two Andy Boy romaine lettuce hearts in clear wrapping with pink lettering on the front.

No one was injured.

Police say the lettuce was purchased in either the Lawrence Avenue and Midland Avenue or Lawrence Avenue and Birchmount Road areas.

Police advise people to check any pre-packaged lettuce before eating it.

City takes a stab at a shark fin ban

Two city councillors proposing ban on delicacy Celebrate Sharks Summer Tour gathering support

PHOEBE HO
TORONTO@METRONEWS.CA

PHOEBE HO/FOR METRO

If two city councillors get their way, shark fin, a known Chinese delicacy, may be wiped off restaurant menus in Toronto by the end of this year.

Councillors Glenn De Baeremaeker and Kristyn Wong-Tam gathered the media yesterday to outline details of the proposed ban of the sale, possession and consumption of shark fins within the city of Toronto and to announce the launch of the Celebrate Sharks Summer Tour, an initiative aimed at gathering support from the community with a 10,000-signature petition.

"I think this is a global problem. We're offering a global solution," De Baeremaeker said. "I feel very confident that, come this Christmas, you won't be able to buy shark fin soup in the city of Toronto."

The unethical practice of shark finning and the dwindling shark population have raised concerns within the community.

Discarded remains

- Shark finning: Shark fins are removed and kept while the fin-less shark is discarded back to sea.
- Sharks are slaughtered at rate of 70 million per year.
- Their population dropped by 90 per cent in last few decades.
- Shark Savers: Founded in 2007 to promote shark conservation by educating the public and creating awareness through various programs and campaigns.

Judson Chiu, head of the Shark Savers branch in Toronto, was at the media conference in support of the proposed ban on shark fins.

As a member of the Chinese community and a strong advocate for the ban of shark fins in Toronto, Chiu says the consumption of shark fin is not a matter of tradition, but a lifestyle decision based on the knowledge and consequences of the practice.

"In Toronto, I found that we are actually less progressive. People in Hong Kong have already started to realize this issue," Chiu said. "For instance, my cousin who just had her wedding last week, she didn't serve shark fin soup. It's not a disgrace, it's a lifestyle choice."

While shark fin may be known as a Chinese delicacy, Chiu says he has been surprised by the support they have received within the community.

"I guess it's easier for people of Asian descent to sort of feel some kind of connection with the issue. It's not really an Asian issue but it does affect the Asian community."

Corporate naming rights not ruled out for city's public spaces

Hey kids, want to go to Kraft Withrow Park? Wal-Mart community centre? Greenpeace splash pad?

City staff say those are not the likely outcomes from a report going to executive committee next Monday proposing cash-strapped Toronto revise and ramp up its corporate naming and sponsorship efforts.

But there is nothing in the recommendations preventing staff from suggesting, and council agreeing to, corporations buying naming rights to parks or any other city property.

And Coun. Norm Kelly, chair of the parks environment committee, is not rejecting the notion out of hand.

"For a cash-strapped municipality, we're in a very tight spot so we have to look at everything that's fair and reasonable," Kelly said when asked specifically about corporate naming rights for parks.

He noted Mayor Rob Ford and Coun. Doug Ford are strong proponents of public-private partnerships, as is he, and he is open to such discussions.

"I see nothing objectionable at this stage."

Doug Ford said "folks don't have to worry about Doritos City Hall."

He said his brother's administration wants to encourage businesses to contribute cash for park equipment and improvement.

"But certainly for large parks we'll be looking at a sign or something in the park, not the name of the park itself, and only if the local councillor and the community support it."

CARLOS OSORIO/TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

▶ Coun. Norm Kelly, chair of the parks environment committee.

Staff are recommending they be authorized to "identify appropriate properties for potential naming rights," and consult internal and external stakeholders to establish guidelines for the valuation of "city properties that may be leveraged for sponsorships and naming rights."

Phyllis Berck, director of the Toronto Office of Partnerships, said the goal is to have "a consistent, fair and transparent process for reviewing" such opportunities.

"It's not intended to go out and put a name on everything," she said, adding staff would "be selective, suggesting something when it's the right fit."

Coun. Paula Fletcher, the former parks chair, said she doesn't want to dissuade corporations, organizations and wealthy individuals from helping the city.

"But I'm a little concerned that we'll leave out honouring people who don't have money, who made a mark or left a legacy for the city but weren't rich."

- Community councils would be able to authorize sponsorship deals, while only council would be able to authorize naming rights.
- The report, requested by the budget committee in January, states Calgary, Winnipeg, Chicago and New York proactively solicit offers to buy naming rights but there are a "limited number of examples" in Toronto.
- They include Scotiabank Nuit Blanche, the Franklin Children's Garden at Centre Island and the BMO Field soccer stadium.

A look at Union Station's 'big dig'

Many of the station's heritage elements considered in makeover Construction should be completed by 2016

A quarter-million commuters sleepwalk past the hoarding at Union Station every day, most oblivious to the hidden engineering and construction marvels taking place behind the scenes.

Actually, that's the idea — transform the station from below its foundation to its rooftop without disrupting the flow of people and trains in Canada's busiest transportation hub.

The exercise, that is costing about $640 million, is so complex that experts say it's probably unprecedented in Canada, where it is seldom used on structures as large as the station and virtually never when they're still in operation.

"It's an amazing feat what we're doing," Bruce Bowes, Toronto's chief corporate officer, told reporters who got a sneak peak yesterday, the one-year anniversary of the start of construction.

A major component of the work involves building a new lower level below the GO concourses. The "big dig," as it's known, means dropping the lower concourse about four metres in the areas from Bay to York streets and then from Front Street south to the Air Canada Centre to accommodate a 14,000-square-metre shopping mall.

"We're making this a major destination site. We want people to come here because it's a jewel," said Bowes.

City poised to take over arena's $40M debt

The Lakeshore Lions Arena also where the Toronto Maple Leafs train

The City of Toronto is looking at taking over the debt-plagued Lakeshore Lions Arena, also known as the MasterCard Centre for Hockey Excellence.

Under a rescue plan going to council's executive committee next week, the city would assume responsibility for repaying about $40 million borrowed to build the four-pad arena on Kipling Avenue.

Since it opened in September 2009, the centre has been making about $1.6 million per year with the major tenant being the Leafs and Marlies, and 500 hours per year of no-charge ice time allocated to the public school board, which owns the land.

AARON HARRIS/TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

▶ Lakeshore Lions Arena

But there's been no money to cover debt payments and the Lakeshore Lions Club was in danger of defaulting, a city staff report said.

Arena president Bob Harris declined comment.

The facility — the first built in Toronto in two decades — features four NHL-sized rinks, one of which can be expanded to Olympic size. It replaced the single-rink Lakeshore Lions Arena, which opened in 1951.

And the rescue plan would not be the first time the city has decided to step in and take over from outside operators. Council is being asked this week to approve a city takeover of Casa Loma from the Kiwanis Club, which has run the struggling tourist attraction since 1937.

In the case of the arena, Deputy Mayor Doug Holyday said the cost of building the facility increased to $44 million from $33.65 million and efforts to boost revenues never happened.

"There were a couple profit centres that never materialized, they were going to have a major restaurant that never came, and they were going to have a sporting goods facility that never came."

However, the centre is charging adults top rental rates, Holyday said, noting the group he plays hockey with pays more than $300 per hour.

While it wasn't a city project, council assisted the Lions Club to arrange financing by acting as guarantor, meaning the city would repay loans if the club defaulted.

Global kids vaccine drive gets big boosters

Britain, Bill Gates unite to pledge more than half of $4 billion sought to vaccinate millions of kids by 2015

Donors promised to give a global vaccines body more than $4 billion to help it protect millions of children from diseases like measles, pneumonia and yellow fever.

At a one-day pledging conference in London yesterday, British Prime Minister David Cameron announced his country would provide $1.3 billion of new funding up to 2015.

Canada said it would increase its commitment to the Global Alliance for Vaccines and Immunization to $65 million over five years from the original pledge of $50 million over five years

"Canada will continue to support the work of the GAVI Alliance to immunize and save the lives of millions of children in developing countries," said Bev Oda, the minister of international co-operation.

Australia announced Sunday it would commit $211 million, and the Bill and Melinda Gates Foundation declared it would donate more than $1 billion to the cause.

GAVI is an alliance of organizations including the Gates Foundation, the World Health Organization, UNICEF, major vaccine makers and others. The group buys injections for the world's poorest countries. They estimate about two million children die every year from diseases that could have been prevented with a shot.

"For the first time in history, children in developing countries will receive the same vaccines against diarrhea and pneumonia as children in rich countries. Together we must do more to ensure that all children — no matter where they live — have equal access to life-saving vaccines." BILL GATES, CO-CHAIR OF THE GATES FOUNDATION

▶ Microsoft tycoon Bill Gates holds a vial of vaccine yesterday during a media conference at the GAVI (Global Alliance for Vaccines and Immunization) conference in London.

Vaccines not 'magic answer'

Several years ago, a study published in the journal Lancet showed dozens of developing countries exaggerated figures on how many children were vaccinated against deadly diseases, allowing them to get more money from GAVI. Researchers said only half as many children as claimed were immunized.

Other experts warned more money wouldn't solve the problem and that donating vaccines to countries with broken health systems might mean they end up in warehouses.

"We need to be mindful of the fact that investment in vaccines is not the magic answer to global health issues such as pneumonia and diarrhea," said Sophie Harman, a public health expert at City University in London. "Without proper funding commitments to health infrastructure ... any investment in vaccines will be redundant."

Gadhafi not a pawn in NATO air campaign

LIBYAN STATE TV/THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Russian head of the World Chess Federation pays Libyan leader a visit

As the world awaits Moammar Gadhafi's next move, the Libyan leader has been playing chess.

Libyan state television showed Gadhafi, dressed all in black and wearing dark sunglasses, playing chess Sunday evening with the eccentric chess federation president Kirsan Ilyumzhinov, who, until last year, was the leader of Russia's predominantly Buddhist republic of Kalmykia.

Russia's Interfax news agency quoted Ilyumzhinov as saying Gadhafi told him he has no intention of leaving Libya despite international pressure as rebels with NATO air support fight to end his 40-year rule.

Meanwhile, government artillery rained down on rebel forces yesterday but failed to stop their advance into key ground west of their stronghold at Libya's major port. As fighting raged for a fourth day, Germany's foreign minister paid a surprise visit to the rebel's de facto capital.

Guido Westerwelle met with officials of the Transitional National Council, telling them Germany recognized the council as "the legitimate representative of the Libyan people."

GROWING DREAMS

Teriano, a member of the Maasai tribe of Kenya, has been studying in Toronto for four years. She plans to return to Africa, where she has big dreams of helping her people.

At first glance, Teriano doesn't seem much different from any of thousands of other Ryerson University students. She wears the standard jeans-and-windbreaker uniform, spends most of her time studying and posts pictures of outings and friends on Facebook.

But in fact, Teriano, a fourth-year social-work student, has a remarkable story that shows how the smallest act can have a huge impact.

Teriano was born a member of the Maasai tribe in southern Kenya and immediately promised in marriage to a man who was already 27 years old. "My mother married the same way, my grandma and everybody else. It was just normal to be booked for marriage and to get married at 13 or 14," she explains. "It almost happened to me."

It didn't, because when she was four years old an Australian family sponsored her through World Vision. That meant that after she had completed primary school, she was able to attend high school, and then college for a year in Nairobi. "No girl in my village had ever gone to college or university," she recalls. While her father was baffled by her ambition and bound by the marriage deal he'd made, Teriano convinced him to break it, and to let her go.

She came to Canada four years ago and plans to stay to finish a Masters degree. And her dreams keep growing along with her horizons.

For example, she wants to help women in her village start business cooperatives so that they can support themselves and their families. She'd like to set up a community fund to enable other youth in her village – particularly girls – to go to high school and college. She wants to find out how the Maasai, who raise livestock, can become more efficient farmers.

"I thought, maybe I could talk to farmers in Canada and ask, 'How do you do it?' Information like that could transform our community."

A year and a half ago, Teriano visited her village in Kenya. Four hundred people came to a celebration to honour her. She was amazed. "There were speeches. People blessed me, and said they admired me. Young people said, 'We can do it because you did it.'

"There had been some families in my village who said, 'I will never take my girls to school, only my boys.' That day, I saw their girls in school and thought, 'Yes!'"

The experience made her think: "Sometimes you don't know the impact you are making, just by doing things. Sometimes actions really speak." How true.

Lebanon's new cabinet dominated by militant group

Hezbollah and its allies rose to a position of unprecedented dominance in Lebanon's government yesterday, giving patrons Syria and Iran greater sway in the Middle East. Lebanon's prime minister announced the new cabinet after five months without a functioning government. Hezbollah secured enough support in parliament to name Najib Mikati as its pick for prime minister. Mikati announced a cabinet yesterday that gives Hezbollah and its allies 16 of the 30 seats. In the previous government, it had 10 seats.

HOME ICE ADVANTAGE

A fog of nervous energy seemed to sit over Vancouver yesterday several hours ahead of puck drop.

People were hopeful to see their team win their first Stanley Cup, but anxious, especially given the 8-1 and 4-0 trouncings the team suffered when it was run out of Boston in games 3 and 4.

Downpours throughout the morning did little to dampen spirits and as game time approached, people in Canucks sweaters began sprouting up on sidewalks and lineups began forming outside pubs at noon.

Vancouver Mayor Gregor Robertson said the city was anticipating crowds similar in size to the 100,000 who celebrated downtown after Game 5.

"I think we are going to see the Canucks come out charging tonight," Robertson told Metro reporter Sahara Giannone earlier in the day.

Blimp blows up after pilot saves riders

Pilot dies in the Goodyear zeppelin, which was used for marketing purposes

GETTY IMAGES

▶ A zeppelin crashes Sunday near Oberursel, Germany. The pilot of the zeppelin was killed and three passengers had to leap to safety when the aircraft caught fire and crashed, a police spokesperson said.

A pilot of a German blimp has been hailed a hero after he saved three passengers by ordering them to jump from the burning aircraft only to then die himself.

The blimp was about to land at an airfield in Reichelsheim, outside Frankfurt, when fire broke out in both engines, the Spiegel newspaper reports.

The blimp was about two metres above the ground when the pilot told his passengers, all journalists, to jump to the ground while he tried to land safely.

"The second airship has been withdrawn from service until further notice."
GOODYEAR OFFICIALS, IN AS STATEMENT ISSUED YESTERDAY

The blimp, part of an advertising campaign for the Goodyear tire company, was returning from an appearance at a local music festival, and the journalists had been taking aerial photographs.

That reduced the weight of the blimp, causing it to shoot 50 metres into the air where it exploded with the burning wreckage falling to the ground.

Michael Nerandzic, the 53-year-old Australian pilot, was unable to escape and died in the wreckage.

Photographer Joachim Storch, who was one of the passengers, told Germany's Bild newspaper that the pilot encountered difficulties as he was coming in to land.

The cause of the crash is under investigation.

May plans to block Tory bill

Green party Leader Elizabeth May tackles bill aimed at speeding up cases when multiple people are on trial

It didn't take long for the first and only Green party member elected to Parliament to make her presence felt.

Green party Leader Elizabeth May said yesterday that she plans to block the Harper government's plan to rush through a so-called "mega trials" bill this month.

Justice Minister Rob Nicholson wants the legislation passed by month's end, but May said she will deny the unanimous consent needed to fast-track the legislation.

As the lone dissenter so far, she said the bill needs thorough consideration.

"Fundamentally changing the Criminal Code to undermine some of what I regard as fundamental principles of justice over centuries would in my view require more hearings," May said.

The NDP and Liberals said they would back speedy passage of the bill, while the four Bloc Québécois MPs have yet to make up their minds. That leaves May as the only obstacle to fast-tracking the legislation.

- Legislation The Tories pledged to introduce and pass all their tough-on-crime legislation in one package of bills within the first 100 sitting days of their new majority government.
- Stretched The bill would do away with the duplication of efforts within the already stretched criminal-justice system by allowing joint hearings on pre-trial motions for multiple accused.

New Zealand rocked again

SUV, police car tip into sinkholes Two injured while salvaging windows from St. John's Church

MARK MITCHELL-NEW ZEALAND HERALD/THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

▶ A portion of this cliff top house lies at the bottom of the cliff in Sumner, near Christchurch, New Zealand, yesterday following a series of aftershocks.

Strong aftershocks rattled New Zealand's quake-devastated city of Christchurch again yesterday, toppling one of the few buildings still standing downtown and sinking thousands of homes into darkness.

Bricks crashed down in the cordoned-off city centre, where only workers have tread since it was devastated in February's major earthquake. About 200 people were there when the quakes struck yesterday, and two were briefly trapped in a church. More than 40 people were taken to hospitals with minor injuries from falling debris, city council said.

About 47,000 homes in the city's eastern suburbs were without power when temperatures were expected to approach freezing. Rocks tumbled down hills in the area, which was among the hardest hit in February, and silt bubbled from the ground — a process known as liquefaction that sometimes happens during a quake.

A loss of Facebook?

Report suggests website losing ground in Canada
Developing countries picking up the slack

The head of Facebook Canada says there is still plenty of room for the social networking giant to grow north of the border, but some new numbers suggest that may not be the case.

A report from trend-tracker Inside Facebook says the number of Canadians using the site has dropped by about 1.52 million to 16.6 million.

Canada's numbers reflect a global trend suggesting that Facebook use in a country seems to plateau when 50 per cent of the population is signed up. Some 49.27 per cent of Canadians use Facebook, says another trend tracker, Socialbakers.

But Jordan Banks, managing director at Facebook Canada, says he doesn't believe Facebook use in Canada is slowing.

"I don't think we're plateauing at all," he said in an interview this year. "When you take a look at ... how many times they come in a given month to how much time they spend, pages viewed — it continues to grow at a very rapid rate."

Maple Group, the Canadian consortium looking to buy TMX Group Inc., has launched its $3.7-billion hostile bid, pitching it as a stronger platform for growth compared to a friendly merger with the London Stock Exchange Group.

Calling the Toronto exchange a global leader, Luc Bertrand, Maple Group spokesman and vice-chairman of National Bank Financial, said, "Our vision at Maple is to build on (its) strengths rather than shore up the LSE's weaknesses."

For the Maple deal to go forward, TMX shareholders must vote down the proposed merger with the London exchange at a June 30 meeting.

Pensions and wages block Air Canada deal

Air Canada was heading toward its first strike in more than a decade amid last-minute negotiations between the airline and 3,800 customer-service and sales agents.

The two sides have reached agreement on some issues but the major stumbling blocks of wages and pensions were outstanding as talks continued yesterday at a Toronto hotel as a midnight strike deadline approached.

"We did a lot of work but it just seems to me that we should be moving a little bit quicker than we are right now," Ken Lewenza, president of the Canadian Auto Workers union, said yesterday.

He said the union's proposal, submitted Sunday, aims to provide members with pension security and wage increases after a decade of uncertainty, but acknowledged there was "a huge gap" between the sides on the two key issues.

"At the end of the day our members have had 10 years of significant sacrifices. Now it's time to make some progress, and wages are a big key to getting an agreement."

Air Canada declined to discuss the negotiations, but said it was working toward reaching a settlement that "respects our employees and ensures Air Canada's long-term sustainability without a labour disruption."

Canada Post says strike is 'digging to the bone'

ADRIAN WYLD/THE CANADIAN PRESS

"Canada Post is trying to do everything it can to provoke the union into a national walkout in the hope that the government will intervene."
DENIS LEMELIN, CUPW PRESIDENT

Urban Canadians aren't getting letters today, but the union representing striking postal workers wants you to know that wasn't its decision.

Canada Post is limiting letter delivery in cities to Monday, Wednesday and Friday because the postal service has lost $65 million since the strike began, officials said yesterday.

"They are digging to the bone. They are pushing major customers to go to the competition," Canada Post spokesman Jon Hamilton said.

But the Canadian Union of Postal Workers countered that the limited delivery will disrupt mail service to more people in one day than the union's rotating strikes have in total so far.

Calling the move a "partial lockout," CUPW president Denis Lemelin accused Canada Post of trying to force Ottawa to legislate the postal workers back to work.

But as of yesterday, the government appeared to have ruled out back-to-work legislation for now.

Expressing concern about the impact of the dispute on the economy, the parliamentary secretary to federal Labour Minister Lisa Raitt said the government is still hoping for a negotiated settlement.

THE TRUTH ABOUT LIFE IN A CUBICLE

SHE SAYS ...

JESSICA NAPIER
METRO

I used to think Office Space was a hilarious comedy about disgruntled co-workers at a fictional software company. After working at a desk job for a little more than a year now, I have come to realize that the film is actually an extremely factual documentary.

While watching workplace-centric sitcoms and movies prepared me for the murderous feelings I would develop toward the photocopier, there are some realities of office life that you just can't anticipate until you start working in the trenches — or, in this case, the cubicle. Here are 10 things I've learned so far:

1. While the average workday lasts eight hours, you will only need to put in approximately three hours of real work. The rest of your day will be spent making to-do lists and looking at celebrity blogs.

2. You will be expected to eat a lot of cake. In order to avoid offending your co-workers, you will have to fake it with a slice of bad store-bought vanilla cake about once a month.

"The time it takes to complete an assignment has nothing to do with your own productivity but is entirely reliant on the number of bosses you have and how likely they are to disagree with one another."

3. If your name is Jessica, someone will call you "Jennifer" at least once a week.

4. The coffee brewed by the communal machine in your office kitchen is the worst cup of coffee you will ever taste. However, after refusing to drink it for a month or two you will eventually give in because … well, it's free.

5. When you buy yourself flowers, everyone will assume you have a secret admirer. If you like to be entertained by gullible co-workers, you will run with it and invent a fictional lover named Carlos who just loves to spoil you.

6. At some point, your boss will want you to befriend him or her on Facebook. You will spend two hours untagging photos of yourself posing as a drunken (insert wildly inappropriate theme-party costume here) before you begrudgingly confirm the friend request.

7. The time it takes to complete an assignment has nothing to do with your own productivity but is entirely reliant on the number of bosses you have and how likely they are to disagree with one another.

8. Even if your co-workers earn more money than you, they will still steal your food.

9. The IT manager is your best friend. Especially if you have a habit of spilling water on your keyboard or downloading viruses.

10. When you write lengthy emails with flowery language that would have made your grad school professor weep with pride, no one will care. After one month, all of your emails will contain only two words: "See attached."

Worth mentioning

LONDON. A 40-year-old American man living in Scotland said yesterday he is sorry for posing as a Syrian lesbian blogger who offered vivid accounts of life amid revolt and repression in Damascus, a hoax that has exposed the difficulty of sifting truth from fiction online.

Tom MacMaster said he created the fictional persona of Amina Arraf and the Gay Girl in Damascus blog to draw attention to conditions in a Middle East convulsed by change.

"I never meant to hurt anyone," the Edinburgh University grad student wrote in an apology on the blog. The university said it had suspended MacMaster's computer privileges while it investigated whether he had breached its rules.

Gay-rights activists and bloggers say MacMaster has endangered real people who are trying to tell their stories in authoritarian societies.

"He completely stole the limelight of real LGBT bloggers and activists in the Middle East and diverted it in a negative way," said Dan Littauer of the website Gay Middle East.

WEIRD NEWS

Miami suffers premature celebration

The Dallas Mavericks' win over the Heat is a huge upset for basketball fans in Miami. Making matters worse, an ad in a local paper mistakenly congratulated the Heat on winning.

A full-page ad that ran in yesterday's Miami Herald reads "Congratulations Miami" next to photos of Heat championship T-shirts and hats from Macy's. One T-shirt reads "Heat 2011 NBA Finals Champions" and the ad shows the Heat's logo on a hat with the words "NBA Champions."

The ad ran under a story about the Heat's loss.

The newspaper issued a correction and apologized for any inconvenience.

A Macy's spokeswoman called it an unfortunate error and apologized to Heat fans.

The Mavericks beat the Heat 105-95 Sunday in Game 6 of the NBA finals in Miami.

Face time with Jim Carrey

On a frigid set with real penguins, the Canadian comic returns to his famous facial mugging It's still all just play for Carrey

NED EHRBAR
SCENE@METRONEWS.CA
METRO WORLD NEWS IN LOS ANGELES

After years of making a fortune off of his elastic face, Jim Carrey is still finding new ways to manipulate it — though not all of them are intentional.

"My face kind of operates on its own nowadays. It just kind of does what it wants to do. Sometimes it's appropriate and sometimes it's not," he says. "Sometimes in the editing room, we'll go, 'That's not human. We want to take that out.'"

After a few live-action roles that required less facial manipulation, Carrey returns to the type of mugging that made him famous in his latest, Mr. Popper's Penguins, which pits his neat-freak corporate real estate broker against six new waddling house guests — played by a mix of animatronics, CGI stand-ins and real, live penguins. It was a working environment more than a little challenging.

"The set was so cold that I was fighting pneumonia the entire time," he says. "Then there was going outside when it was 75 or 80 degrees in five layers of clothing and a parka."

Acting challenges aside, Carrey cops to an affinity for his flightless co-stars. "I think that's why we love penguins, because they don't belong anywhere," he says. "They're wobbly and vulnerable, and they're not really fish and they're not really birds, and that's how I feel. Probably a lot of people do."

A return to more physical comedy also meant a return to childhood for the 49-year-old actor.

"I find I'm still doing things and little tricks and fun things that I created when I was 10 years old," he says.

Intense

Jim Carrey has become an intense user, with more than 3 million followers on Twitter. Here are some recent postings.

John Wayne vs. aliens

Battle Los Angeles
Genre: Sci-fi
Director: John Liebesman
Star: Aaron Eckhart
◍◍

The Marines vs. invading space aliens, in which Staff-Sgt. Michael Nantz (Aaron Eckhart) and his fellow jarheads summon John Wayne's squinty ghost too bluntly and too often.

Nantz is the Duke's surrogate, a 40-something career Marine ready to hang up his dog tags. He has a bad case of survivor guilt, having returned from too many fights with too few friends. He doesn't have long to brood, because flying saucers borrowed from the District 9 gang begin attacking.

Nantz's country, and his planet, is calling him. What's a good Marine to do except man up, stare down and commence firing?

He's saddled with a sad group of fighting men (and one woman), as well as an abysmal script by Christopher Bertolini and upchuck-inducing direction by Jonathan Liebesman (Darkness Falls).

Unlike most alien invasion flicks, where the Marines are defeated at the outset, leaving the lone wacky scientist to save the day, this is a boots-on-the-ground battle film that's almost completely free of eggheads.

It's been shot digitally with what seems like one completely unhinged camera, the aliens apparently having knocked out our Steadicam technology.

The aliens cease fire just long enough for the humans to make meaningful speeches about their lives, and how Marines never give up, etc.

Extras include numerous featurettes.

PETER HOWELL

Hall Pass
Genre: Comedy
Directors: Peter and Bobby Farrelly
Stars: Owen Wilson, Jason Sudeikis

For the first 20 minutes, which is about how long it takes to set up the gimmicky plot about husbands on marital parole, Hall Pass looks like might be worth more than just a pass.

Owen Wilson and Jason Sudeikis click as bored buddies Rick and Fred, who are living happy family lives in Providence, R.I., but not realizing their boyish dreams of cheap and easy sex. The two are plausible as 40-something men in a rut, and the same go for their wives (Jenna Fischer and Christina Applegate).

It's when Rick and Fred are granted the "hall pass" of the title — one week to do whatever they want — that the movie descends to the gross-out depths, with predictable and dull results. The chemistry between Wilson and Sudeikis starts to seem like soda pop that's been left open too long.

Directors Peter and Bobby Farrelly seem unwilling to bust of bad habits, possibly because the one time they did, with 2003's Stuck on You, they received a harsh box office welcome.

Hall Pass didn't do much better, probably because movies where men act like children and women act like their mothers are so common, you could change all the actors and nobody would likely notice. Or care. Extras include deleted scenes, and an extended ending for the Blu-ray. PETER HOWELL

The best medicine?

Project Commando gets the blood pumping with a big dose of its laughter therapy program The non-profit group helps support those with chronic disease, in severe pain

CELIA MILNE
LIFE@METRONEWS.CA

They're not sick jokes, but rather jokes for the sick.

A new, non-profit company called Patient Commando is making sure that stories about health struggles — both sad and funny — get told and listened to. Laughter therapy has long been known as a powerful tool to release tension and get the blood pumping more efficiently.

In Patient Commando's promotional video, a comedic actor spoofs everyone's worst hospital nightmare.

Donning his hat, socks and shoes, he tries to make a dignified exit, but his hospital gown isn't done up and his bare bum jiggles hilariously for all to see.

Comic relief — through laugh therapy and live theatre shows — is one of the ways that Patient Commando helps support people who have chronic disease, terminal disease or are suffering from bereavement.

"I'm interested in the expression of the story. Listen to the patient voice."
TORONTO FOUNDER OF PATIENT COMMANDO ZAL PRESS

The company also encourages people to tell their stories.

"I'm interested in the expression of the story," says Toronto founder of Patient Commando Zal Press. "Listen to the patient voice."

Press himself has struggled with the painful symptoms of Crohn's disease, an inflammation of the intestines, for 30 years.

"It feels like a cat trapped inside my gut trying to claw its way out," he tells Metro.

Press gave up his job selling home decor to start Patient Commando.

The company will be conducting public "laugh therapy" workshops at the Centre for Social Innovation in Toronto from June 15 to July 30.

For more information, go to patientcommando.com.

Set your alarm to happy time

Remember to reconnect with the desire to be happy and tune into a positive perspective as soon as you wake up. Set an alarm on your phone saying, 'Today happiness is my primary function' and have it on snooze at morning, midday and in the evening.

Practice the 'F' word

Forgiveness is the key to personal development and the tool that will guide you to go past resentment and not stay hung up on negative thoughts. It may sound tough, but the first step is to identify the people you resent and you need to forgive and let go of the negative situation. This resentment is lowering your energy so moving on will give you the impetus to move forward.

Meditate

Meditation isn't about big Buddhas, spirituality and fluffy pillows — it doesn't have to be done one 'way'. It can be as simple as sitting and listening to a song that makes you feel good as you focus on your deep breath.

Walking can also be a powerful tool for meditation: breathe in on one step and out on the other. The idea is to tune into that peace so that we can reconnect with the loving presence in us and make decisions based on loving choices.

Be grateful

Make a list of the things in life you are grateful for, focusing on the good stuff like your family, paycheck and sunny weather.

Focusing on what we have, not what we don't have, unleashes the presence of our inner guidance, our 'ing'.

Focus on appreciation and gratitude and you will attract an abundance of high-level experiences such as a wave of energy and creative ideas.

Jump!

Jumping on a trampoline is invigorating, brings you balance and makes you feel like a child again. Moving is a big part of happiness and ultimately finding a physical activity that ignites inner spark, whether that's dancing or running, is vital.

Limit your daily intake of negative news

Between the Japanese Earthquake and Osama bin Laden's death and consequent terrorist threats, it seems like we've already hit our bad news threshold for 2011. Pick and choose the news you read. Instead of going to world news or main headlines, read the Life and Style or Sports section. Read your news at lunchtime, as you are less vulnerable to the impact of bad news on your mood at that time of the day.

WWGD?

If you're being wrongfully attacked by someone and are feeling defencelessness, ask yourself this, 'What would Gandhi do?' Expressing anger toward them will not make you feel any better so when in that moment try and remind yourself that fighting back isn't going to help. Focus on looking for and finding peace in a non-peaceful situation.

Cow Pose/Bitilasana

What you do

1. Stand on your hands and knees in a table top position making sure your knees are set directly below your hips and your wrists, elbows and shoulders are in line and perpendicular to the floor.
2. As you inhale, lift your sitting bones and chest towards the ceiling, allowing your belly to sink towards the floor. Lift your head to look straight forward. Beginners can protect their neck by broadening across the shoulder blades and drawing the shoulders down away from the ears.
3. Exhale, coming back to neutral tabletop position on your hands and knees. Repeat 10 to 20 times.

Benefits

- Stretches the front torso, neck, abdominal organs and spine.
- Provides a gentle yet firm massage to the spine, kidneys and abdominal organs
- Aids digestion and elimination.
- Opens up the hips, eases neck and shoulder stress and tension.
- Improves posture

Measles back again

Get measles shots up to date, health officials urge, as Quebec cases rise

Almost a decade ago, measles was declared eradicated in the Americas, thanks to widespread vaccination efforts. But outbreaks in Quebec and several U.S. states show that Western Hemisphere countries are still not immune to the virus, which can be imported by travellers and quickly infect pools of the unprotected.

And the number of those vulnerable to measles may, in fact, be growing, as some parents choose not to vaccinate their children for a variety of reasons, among them fear of possible side-effects or a belief that measles and other infectious diseases are merely a benign rite of passage in childhood.

Quebec's outbreak, which began early this year and this week jumped to 330 confirmed and suspected cases, has been traced to a traveller from France, where uptake of the measles, mumps and rubella vaccine hovers around 60 per cent of the population — far below the 90-plus per cent rate in Canada. Information provided by Quebec health authorities shows most of those infected were unvaccinated or inadequately vaccinated, making them easy targets for the highly infectious virus, said Dr. John Spika of Canada's Public Health Agency.

While vaccination schedules vary across the country, many jurisdictions call for a first dose at 12 months old and a second before admission to elementary school.

YOU MAY QUALIFY TO PARTICIPATE IN A BRAIN IMAGING STUDY OF PARKINSON'S DISEASE, TITLED "INVESTIGATING THE D3 DOPAMINE RECEPTOR AND ITS RELEVANCE TO TREATMENT-INDUCED COMPLICATIONS IN PARKINSON DISEASE,"

The aim of the study is to measure dopamine receptors in PD patients, using positron emission tomography (PET) brain imaging, and to test relationships with motor and neuropsychiatric symptoms.

Participants must:
- Have a diagnosis of Parkinson's Disease and take levodopa (Sinemet, or generic), but not dopamine agonists (Requip, Mirapex, Apo-Bromocriptine)
- Be medically fit
- Be able to understand/follow instructions
- Not receive treatment for any psychiatric disorder
- Have no history of alcohol or drug abuse
- Have no significant head injury
- Have no metal implants

Financial compensation for participation will be provided.

The study will take place at the Vivian M Rakoff PET Centre of the Centre for Addiction and Mental Health (CAMH) in Toronto, ON. Individuals in the Greater Toronto Area and surrounding counties may participate; incidental expenses such as travel to the PET centre, accommodation the night before each scan, underground parking at the centre, and small meals directly related to scan or testing sessions will be provided or reimbursed by CAMH.

TLP™ IS A "NEW" NON-SURGICAL SCIENTIFIC APPROACH FOR MEN AND WOMEN TO HELP CONTROL THINNING HAIR, BALDNESS AND PROBLEMS ASSOCIATED WITH THE SCALP.

This cold laser creates a soft halo of light around the scalp. Laser hair therapy is a medically tested, safe and proven method using low level laser energy, or "soft cold" laser light to effectively treat and control problem hair loss and encourage new growth.

WILL IT WORK FOR ME?

Laser Therapy is equally effective for both men and women. Most participants will see tangible response within a short period of time after commencing treatment, with results enhanced as the program continues.

In fact, past studies have shown a 93% increase in hair among the respondents using Cold Laser Therapy. For those clients not able to come to our clinic on a regular basis, a home laser program is available.

During your initial consultation and assessment, it will be determined if you are a good candidate for Laser Therapy. If so, your results are assured and backed by our exclusive guarantee.

Testing for autism not an exact science

Not enough evidence for testing, researchers say

ISTOCK PHOTOS

▶ There are conflicting opinions if standardized testing should be applied for autism.

Not enough sound evidence exists for routine screening of all preschoolers to determine whether they have autism, researchers said Monday.

In a paper published in the online edition of the journal Pediatrics, a team at McMaster University in Hamilton said that screening and diagnostic tools are still being developed and revised, and no therapies have a "curative outcome or well-established efficacy to change the course of the condition."

More research is needed because none of the screening tests currently available has "high sensitivity, high specificity and high predictive value ... in a population-wide screening program," wrote Dr. Jan Willem Gorter of the CanChild Centre for Childhood Disability Research, and colleagues.

But the American Academy of Pediatrics has taken a different stance, recommending that screening for autism be incorporated into routine medical practice.

Gorter said in an interview that he hasn't heard of any similar advice from the Canadian counterpart organization.

"If you want to implement such a program you would like to know if you do more good than harm. That actually was our starting point, to go to the literature and find out more about screening," he said.

"Clearly autism is a developmental disability that has a huge impact on children, lives and families and society, so that would be a good reason for screening. Then we looked at what the tests are and what we know about the tests for screening for autism and found there was not much literature supporting that, and you wonder if you do more good than harm."

He also expressed concern about the impact on parents and children if there is a false positive or false negative for those determined to be in the autism spectrum disorder.

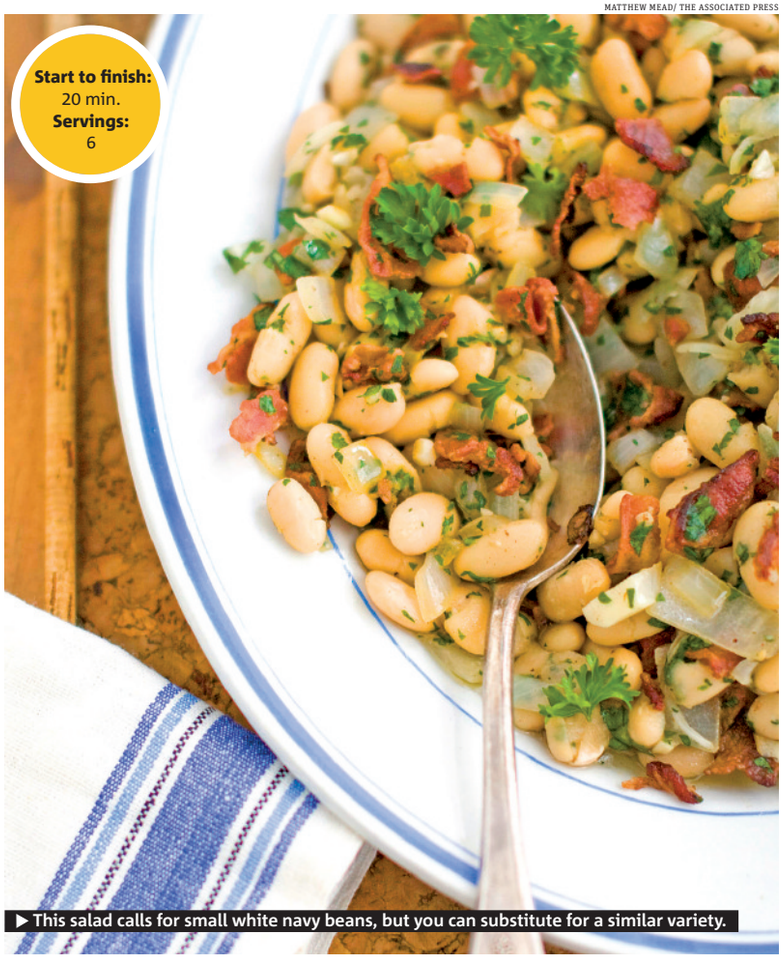
Simple can still mean great

This hearty warm bean and bacon salad uses only a few ingredients but they come together perfectly

MATTHEW MEAD/ THE ASSOCIATED PRESS



▶ This salad calls for small white navy beans, but you can substitute for a similar variety.

Want to build a better salad? Lose the chill, ditch some of the fruit and get the proportions of the vinaigrette right.

That's the advice of Jacques Pepin, one of the premier culinary voices in the U.S. and star of a new public television series — Essential Pepin — that will air in the fall.

Pepin says a great salad can be simple as long as the ingredients are fresh and proportions are right. Too much fruit produces a salad that is too sweet. Likewise, most salads taste best cool, but not cold.

"Also important is the use of great-quality oils and vinegars," he said in an e-mail interview. "And these should be mixed in the proper ratios: one part vinegar to three parts oil."

Getting it right is worth it. Pepin believes a memorable salad has the power to live long after the meal.

"The first time I had a caesar salad, it was served to me by my wife. It had tiny whole romaine leaves, fresh lemon juice, raw egg yolks, olive oil, croutons, etc.," he said. "This was a new combination of tastes for me and I have enjoyed it ever since."

Pepin offers a warm salad of bacon or pancetta tossed with white beans. It is a hearty salad but still feels fresh thanks to a generous use of vinegar.

"I love beans, and particularly white beans," he said. "When they are combined with pancetta and seasoned with vinegar, garlic and olive oil, the result is a salad that is almost like a stew."

Pepin's recipe calls for small white navy beans, but you can substitute any similar variety. He prefers lean slab bacon or pancetta cut into thick slices, then sliced into small cubes, but regular bacon is fine.

Ingredients:

- 250 g (8 oz) slab bacon or pancetta, cut into 1-cm (1/2-inch) pieces
- 1 medium onion, chopped (about 250 ml/1 cup)
- 6 garlic cloves, chopped
- 2 cans (398 ml/14 oz) navy or other small white beans, rinsed and drained
- 2 ml (1/2 tsp) salt
- 125 ml (1/2 cup) chopped fresh parsley
- 45 ml (3 tbsp) red wine vinegar
- 45 ml (3 tbsp) olive oil
- 5 ml (1 tsp) ground black pepper

Preparation:

1. In saucepan over low heat, place bacon. Sauté, covered, for 8 minutes, or until meat has rendered much of its fat. Add onion and garlic and cook, stirring, for about 5 seconds.
2. Transfer contents of saucepan, fat and all, to a large bowl. Add beans, salt, parsley, vinegar, oil and pepper. Mix well, then serve warm or at room temperature.

▶ You can reduce the prosciutto, ketchup and Parmesan in the recipe to reduce the sodium.

Is it possible for the Sloppy Joe to be even sloppier? Yup

These Sloppy Joes start with the intensely flavoured base of tomatoes, beef and pig products. Then they get spooned onto toasted deli rolls and topped with provolone cheese and tossed under the broiler for a minute or so. The result is a beefy sandwich that will leave everyone at the table satisfied.

Preparation:

1. In saucepan over medium-high, combine olive oil, garlic, onion, paprika, basil and oregano. Sauté until onion is tender and seasonings fragrant, about 5 minutes.
2. Add ground beef and prosciutto. Sauté until beef is cooked through and prosciutto begins to brown, about 8 minutes. Add tomato sauce, ketchup and vinegar and bring to a simmer. Stir in Parmesan, season with salt and pepper.
3. Set oven to broil. Arrange bottom halves of rolls on a baking sheet, then spoon some of the sloppy Joe mixture onto each. Top each with a slice of provolone, then broil just until cheese starts to melt. Top with the other halves of the rolls.

Focusing on unprocessed food in the form of five hot boxes, seven salads and five wraps, IQ delivers big portions at reasonable prices. The intense flavours and energizing food (read: filling, but never heavy) seems like a delightful bonus.

Mexi Cobb Salad ($9.29) blends romaine with huge chunks of avocado, black beans, corn, halved grape tomatoes, grilled chicken, fresh jalapeno slices and julienned jicama with a slightly smoky adobo dressing. The burrito-sized Beet + Goat (cheese) Wrap ($7.96) is stuffed with shredded beets, goat cheese, apple, almonds, avocado, spring mix and balsamic vinaigrette.

Also, get a soup. The Spring Pea ($3.32 cup/$3.85 bowl) is wicked.

Give Dad a real gift

ON MONEY

ALISON GRIFFITHS
MONEY@METRONEWS.CA

What a difference a generation makes. Back when my kids were small, Father's Day was under or overdone pancakes, handmade cards, a walk in the park and an extra glass of wine at dinner.

Now, we're talking barbecues, iPads, golf clubs and other products that put a serious dent in your wallet. With personal, non-mortgage debt per capita hitting an all-time high of $26,000, it's time for one word. Don't.

"A fabulous Father's Day starts, not with your wallet, but in the kitchen and the great oudoors."
-ALISON'S MONEY RULE

How much sense does it make to take on debt for a gift that says I love you, to the father or man in your life? None at all.

On the other hand, traditional cheaper gifts aren't necessarily appreciated. According to a recent TD Credit Cards survey, 65 per cent of dads are unimpressed with yet another tie on Father's Day.

Joining the list of Dad's day clichés (read, please don't buy one for me) are coffee mugs and DIY tools. A tool can be cool but if Dad is struggling to keep up around the house he might not want a reminder that there's more to be done.

So what's a daughter, son or wife to do? My vote goes to a picnic complete with a fun activity such as catch, Frisbee, a putting contest, an old-fashioned game of horseshoes or a bike ride. Roast a chicken or fish fillets the night before, add a potato or pasta and green salad, throw in a fresh baguette with a soft, extra creamy cheese, grab some sinful cookies at a local bakery or make a batch of brownies — and you're done!

That's it! No shopping. No pressure. And we do feel pressure over Father's Day. The TD survey discovered that nearly 40 per cent of Canadian sons, daughters and wives are stressed over finding an appropriate and affordable gift. So give yourself a break and the man in your life a memorable (and inexpensive) day.

▶ Dino and Jennifer

My fantastic husband, Dino, and I (Jennifer) met on a blues cruise on a gorgeous, hot and sunny Canada Day in 2007.

It was a scenic four-hour boat tour around Vancouver's stunning False Creek and English Bay.

The day's entertainment featured a band I'd wanted to see called Brickhouse.

I was there with a girlfriend and while she was off mingling, I wandered up to the front of the boat to drink in the view.

There were so many people already lining the bow's edge that there wasn't room for me and I had to hang back.

All of a sudden a very handsome man with a great smile (Dino) turned around and said, 'Come on up!' and scooched over to make room for me.

Sparks flew that night, and just over a year and a half later, on my birthday, he proposed!

We had a wonderful wedding day in June 2010 and are enjoying every adventure that comes our way.

I can't stand my hubby's friends and he can't stand mine. What should we do? Ditch them?

Angela says ...

Every relationship is different and comes with its own set of dynamics.

I think it's perfectly healthy for each partner to have their own group of friends, whose company they enjoy separately.

Hopefully you also have some mutual friends.

If not, get out there and make some.

Derek says...

To Angela's point, hanging out separately with friends is totally healthy — so long as you don't start ragging on your partner after she or he has been out with them.

That will lead you down the path to problems.

Besides, if you're going to start knocking on someone, better to do it together.

From ‘hey there’ to ‘you’re hired’

You run into your dream employer at the gym one day Will you keep working out or work out a contract?

DREW HINSHAW
LIFE@METRONEWS.CA

The craftiest of jobseekers know how to flip small talk into a big opportunity.

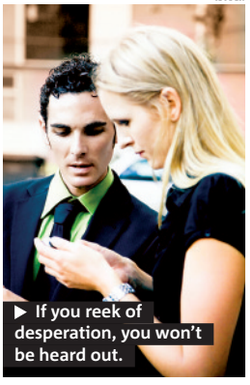
You’ve heard of these types, or, in your six months of unemployment, yearned of being one: They bump into an industry bigwig in a wedding or an elevator and by the time cake is served or the elevator doors open — ding — they’ve scheduled a job interview.

“It’s a skill that can be learned,” career coach Alex Freund says. But not if you smack of desperation.

"You have to develop something I call the likeability factor," Freund adds. "If you come off as flat, apathetic, depressed, who wants to talk to you?"

Play it cool, “Social Networking for Career Success” author Miriam Salpeter agrees.

"You don't want to corner the person or make them feel like you're putting all your eggs in their basket," she says. "It's very stressful when someone feels like you're relying on them."



ISTOCK
▶ If you reek of desperation, you won’t be heard out.

FIND COMMON GROUND

The right place to kick of some career-making chitchat is on common ground, Freund suggests.

"You need to establish a rapport," he advises. "It can be talk about weather, human interests, or commonalities like common friends. But soon after, get to the point."

Don't feel like you need to put on a one-man play explaining how you wound up jobless, either.

"Guilt pushes people in transition to talk about why they're not working," Freund says. "Just say 'I'm in transition.'"

KEEP IT A 2-WAY CONVO

If you’re looking to hear a quick and easy ‘no,’ Salpeter warns, ask a stranger point-blank if they have a job. If you actually want a job, she adds, ask them broad, generalized questions that flatter their expertise.

“You want to make it a conversation, a two-way street,” she says. “You can provide information as well as ask for it. Say, ‘I’d like to talk sometime and share more stories.’”

And remember: The person you’re talking almost certainly isn’t hiring. But they almost certainly know somebody — who knows somebody — who is.

“Say, ‘I don’t expect you to have an opening in this area, but perhaps you can share with me some thoughts about ways I can find out whose hiring.”

BAD BATTLE PICKING

WORKPLACE LAW

DANIEL LUBLIN
DAN@TORONTO-EMPLOYMENTLAWYER.COM
TWITTER: @DANLUBLIN

Too often employers fail to pick their battles. They stubbornly maintain legal arguments that seldom succeed, and they tend to allege employee misconduct without the facts to support that claim. Mostly, it is just because they can. The good news is that the courts are often unimpressed.

Donald Duguay was hired as a "Cubex driller" in mine production. He was not hired to do "rock bolting" work, which is more dangerous than drilling and requires extensive training. During his job interview, Duguay specifically said that he did not want to do bolting.

However, shortly after he started, Duguay was told to perform bolting work. Confused, Duguay shadowed a bolter, but declined to do any of the work. A few hours later, the company demanded that Duguay stop observing and start bolting. Not surprisingly, Duguay refused, and announced, "I won't bolt now or ever!"

Duguay was fired on the spot. The company claimed that his refusal to bolt was serious insubordination and that he needed to perform whatever work the company required of him. Unconvinced by this claim, Duguay recently sued for wrongful dismissal.

At trial, the court scrutinized Duguay's job description and the way the company forced him to bolt. In finding that Duguay was hired only to drill and do related mine production duties, the court said that if the company wanted him to perform other duties such as bolting, that requirement must be made clear to Duguay at the time he was hired, not after. Therefore, Duguay's refusal to bolt was not insubordination because the company could not suddenly impose those duties on him without his agreement. Duguay was awarded severance, and the company was out of luck.

There are a few key takeaways: employees need to carefully consider whether they can decline new directives. Mistakenly interpreting a change in their job as being major will rebound poorly on them, not their employer. Employers have to pick their battles prudently.

Towards a paperless post-secondary school

With everything from shopping to global communication available at the click of a mouse, it's surprising that the practice of handing in printed papers has endured at most Canadian universities.

Todd Pettigrew, an English literature professor at Cape Breton University in Nova Scotia, sums it up this way: "Habit."

"I had always done it that way, so I hadn't really thought about going completely paperless," Pettigrew said.

Last fall, a colleague at McMaster University in Hamilton inspired Pettigrew to begin asking his students to email him their essays as Word files. Pettigrew wrote electronic comments, graded the papers, turned the files into PDFs and emailed them back.

Using email allowed him to have a clear record of when students had sent their papers in and an easy way to keep them on file for the rest of the year.

The process is also easier for students, who no longer need to squint at their professor's handwritten chicken scratch in the margins of their papers.

"Submitting something online means I won't have to rescue my paper from the giant piles when everyone is asked to pick them up after class all at once," said Krislyn Fernandes, 23, a recent graduate of the health sciences program at the University of Ottawa.

▶ Boston's Milan Lucic scores a goal against Vancouver goalie Roberto Luongo in the first period last night.

Bruins chase Luongo from the net with three early goals, send series back to Vancouver

It was a short night for Vancouver Canucks goaltender Roberto Luongo.

Luongo was pulled after allowing three quick goals in the first period of Game 6 of the Stanley Cup final against the Boston Bruins last night.

Boston won the game 5-2, forcing a Game 7 tomorrow night in Vancouver.

The Bruins chased Luongo at 8:35 after Andrew Ference's power-play goal made the score 3-0. Luongo had previously allowed goals 35 seconds apart by Brad Marchand and Milan Lucic.

Vancouver coach Alain Vigneault made the decision to pull Luongo after he stopped five of eight shots.

BRUINS	CANUCKS
5	2

"I just felt it was the thing to do at the time," Vigneault said.

Vigneault indicated that Luongo would start Game 7 in Vancouver, where the goaltender has been excellent.

"I haven't talked to him. He knows he's going back in next game. He's going to be real good," Vigneault said.

Luongo said he was ready to move on from his poor performance.

"I've got to believe in myself, right? That's a big component of bouncing back and playing a good game," Luongo said. "So we're going to put what happened tonight behind us as soon as possible and get ready for obviously what is going to be a dream — as far as playing in a Game 7 of a Stanley Cup final."

Backup Cory Schneider replaced Luongo and gave up another goal in short order and the Canucks trailed 4-0 after 20 minutes. Schneider finished the game, stopping 30 of 32 shots.

Boston goaltender Tim Thomas stopped 36 of 38 shots and was named the game's first star.

"He's been in his zone through the whole playoffs," Boston coach Claude Julien said. "You can barely count on one hand the bad goals he's given up in the whole playoffs. We all know that teams that have won the Stanley Cup have had unbelievable goaltending. We feel like we've got that."

While Luongo's struggles have been limited to the East Coast, the Sedin twins finally showed life for perhaps the first time in the series. The NHL's last two scoring champions have done a monumental disappearing act in the final, although they doubled their point total for the entire series when Daniel Sedin assisted on Henrik Sedin's backhand in the third period for just the second goal of the series by Vancouver's league-best power play, which dropped to 2 for 31.

Daniel Sedin, the NHL scoring champion, added an assist on Maxim Lapierre's third-period goal, giving him four points in the series.

King James still without NBA crown

LeBron's most scrutinized season ends with puzzlingly lacklustre finals

There were seven seconds left in the NBA season and the Dallas Mavericks were beginning their championship celebration when LeBron James started slowly walking toward Dwyane Wade, his right hand outstretched.

A quick embrace, and with that, the off-season began.

For the Miami Heat, it's time to regroup.

Changing locales did not bring change to the ultimate outcome for James, whose eighth NBA season and first in Miami ended the same as his seven in Cleveland — without a championship. He took a swipe at those who criticized him and the Heat, saying the quality of their lives will not improve because he failed to win a title.

"There's no distractions that can stop me from trying to chase an NBA championship," James said Sunday night, after Game 6.

The Heat had the homecourt edge, were perceived as favourites and came into the finals flying high after needing only 11 games to get past Boston and Chicago.

Then ... thud.

A Game 1 win was followed by a Game 2 collapse, and the series was never the same as Dallas won four of the final five contests.

Dallas rejoices

The Mavericks returned home yesterday, cheered by hundreds of fans celebrating the team's NBA title at Love Field airport in Dallas.

- The championship, the first in the team's 31-year history, is a breakthrough.
- The franchise was once one of the worst in the NBA and, even after owner Mark Cuban's infusion of cash, had a reputation of failing to win big games.

"There's no hiding," said Chris Bosh, who doubled over crying in the bowels of American Airlines Arena after Game 6. "In the NBA you play a series, best of seven games, usually the better team is going to win.

"So we've got a lot of work to do. We have to go back to the drawing board. It hurts to come this far and come up short."

MacLean to coach Sens, sources say

Detroit Red Wings assistant Paul MacLean has been hired as the new coach of the Ottawa Senators.

Two people familiar with the decision confirmed the move yesterday, speaking with The Associated Press on condition of anonymity because it had not been formally announced by the Senators. The hire was first reported by ESPN.com.

The Senators fired head coach Cory Clouston and two assistants in April after the team failed to qualify for the playoffs for the second time in three seasons.

PAUL SANCYA/THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

▶ Paul MacLean

MacLean has spent the past five years as an assistant in Detroit, helping the team win the championship in 2008. He and Wings coach Mike Babcock also worked together for two years in Anaheim, taking the Ducks to the Stanley Cup final.

MacLean spent 11 seasons in the NHL, playing in 719 games for Winnipeg, Detroit and St. Louis from 1980-91. He finished with 324 goals and 349 assists.

Prior to joining the Anaheim coaching staff in 2002, the Antigonish, N.S., native was head coach of the Quad City Mallards of the United Hockey League. He also spent time coaching minor-league teams in Kansas City and Peoria, Ill., and has been assistant coach with the Phoenix Coyotes and a scout for the St. Louis Blues.

In Ottawa, MacLean will be working for general manager Bryan Murray, his old boss in Anaheim. Murray, who recently received a three-year contract extension, has fired three coaches since he left the job himself to become GM after the Senators reached the final in 2007. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NBA enters off-season of uncertainty

As Dirk Nowitzki and Dwyane Wade traded big shots in a thrilling NBA finals, with fans tuning in at levels the league hadn't seen since the days of the Kobe-Shaq Lakers, the questions came more frequently.

How can commissioner David Stern tell all those viewers to go watch something else?

How can they shut it down now?

"It's an odd position, when the game is the best it's ever been, when the ratings are the highest they've ever been, when the excitement is the greatest it's ever (been)," players association lawyer Jeffrey Kessler said last week. "It's sort of odd to see the owners say we're going to destroy this game unless you change this whole system. Players just want to play."

When the Dallas Mavericks finished off the Miami Heat Sunday, it sent the NBA into a most uncertain off-season.

Owners and players are nowhere close on a new collective bargaining agreement to replace the one that expires June 30. Without a new deal, players say they have been told by the owners they will be locked out.

The NBA was reduced to a 50-game season by a work stoppage in 1998-99, and the loss of games is a threat now. Citing league-wide losses of about $300 million US this season, the league hasn't budged on its desire for significant changes to the financial structure, ranging from reductions in the length of contracts and the amount of guarantees, to an overhaul of the salary cap system that would prevent teams from being able to exceed it, as they can now under certain exceptions.

The championship clincher was the highest-rated Game 6 ever on ABC, in large part because of the Heat, whose star power created a must-see team.

The re-emergence of teams like the Chicago Bulls and, to a lesser extent, the New York Knicks over the last season has also piqued interest in some of the NBA's traditionally strong markets. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Robede seeing light after concussion

'It was hard for me just to be normal,' says Argos tackle

Miguel Robede stood on the field at the University of Toronto Mississauga yesterday, soaking up the sun and looking like a guy who was thrilled to be there.

"I like it here very much," the Toronto Argonauts defensive tackle said with a laugh at the conclusion of the day's first training camp practice. "Except for the humidity."

The fact that Robede could stand on a sunny field without pain is another reason he's happy: Six months ago he couldn't bear strong light as he dealt with a serious concussion.

The 29-year-old from Val-d'Or, Que., was in the midst of the darkest days of his life, both literally and figuratively. He suffered a concussion late in the 2010 season after a collision with a Calgary Stampeders teammate.

ANDREW FRANCIS WALLACE/TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

"We're happy with where Miguel's at."
ARGOS HEAD COACH JIM BARKER

"They told me I was going to have paranoia, anxiety and problems with co-ordination, problems with bright lights, sunlight," he recalled. "I thought, I can't stay like this ... I was in the dark because I couldn't cope with light"

Equally difficult was the fear that his personality had changed for good. He avoided those closest to him.

Robede cocooned himself in a remote northern Quebec cabin without TV or lights and soon noticed an improvement. By the end of January, he started to feel like himself again.

Now, three weeks after being acquired by the Argos, Robede says he is symptom-free.

He's had a few physical woes in camp, but Robede appears positioned to fill one of the spots left by the retirement of Adriano Belli and the departure of Eric Taylor on the Argos defensive line. TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

Today's horoscope

For today's crossword answers and for expanded horoscopes, go to metronews.ca

♈ Aries March 21-April 20 You will be in the thick of the action today.
♉ Taurus April 21-May 21 If you make changes today it's unlikely you will be able to change back again later.
♊ Gemini May 22-June 21 The approaching eclipse suggests you will be tempted to take on someone who is, to be frank, out of your league.
♋ Cancer June 22-July 22 Steer clear of anything that might depress you today — and steer clear of people who seem to think failure is something to be accepted.
♌ Leo July 23-Aug.23 If someone challenges you today you must stand up for yourself.
♍ Virgo Aug. 24- Sept. 22 If you find yourself up against forces that are difficult to cope with then it might be wise to back off.
♎ Libra Sept. 23-Oct. 23 This should be a fun day for you, but you might not get much work finished.
♏ Scorpio Oct. 24-Nov. 22 You have never been one to let others take advantage of you but that does not mean they won't try.
♐ Sagittarius Nov. 23-Dec. 21 If someone stands in your way today you must shove them aside.
♑ Capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 20 Don't change your routines or your methods simply to fit in.
♒ Aquarius Jan. 21-Feb. 18 You may fall out with a partner or loved one over the next days.
♓ Pisces Feb. 19-March 20. Compromise solutions may be hard to come by.
